Chapter 167: The Castles of Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin

With the blessings and permission granted by the Divine Triad, the children of Sung Su-Ho and Sung Jin-Woo were given the honor of creating their own realms beneath the divine castles of their parents. These castles, established under the majestic Umbra Citadel and Eternis Draconis, were meant to serve as both a testament to their power and their place in the ongoing legacy of the Divine Triad.

As the construction began, the power and grandeur of these castles were destined to rival even the greatest of divine fortresses, reflecting the boundless potential of their creators.

1. Sung Ye-Jun: The Dark Crimson Dragon and His Castle

Sung Ye-Jun, born with the essence of the Dark Crimson Dragon, was a being of immense strength and divine lineage. His transformation into a dragon was a symbol of his undying will and mastery over fire, flame, and shadows. With the power of three hearts, including the Dragon Heart and the newly granted Dark Silver Celestial Heart, Sung Ye-Jun set about creating a castle beneath Eternis Draconis, the realm of his grandfather Sung Su-Ho.

Castle Name: Inferna Draconis

Description:
Inferna Draconis was a magnificent, awe-inspiring fortress, reflecting the fiery might of Sung Ye-Jun. The castle's exterior was forged from dark, molten rock, with towering spires that seemed to be constantly bathed in a reddish glow, as if the very stone itself was aflame. Massive wings of crimson and black dragon scales adorned the structure, making it appear as if the castle was in a perpetual state of ascent, a dark crimson dragon frozen in time.

The core of Inferna Draconis was a vast, cavernous chamber, filled with flowing rivers of lava and glowing, dragon-shaped sculptures carved into the walls. The throne room was perched atop a peak of obsidian, where Sung Ye-Jun would rule in a manner befitting his dragon heritage — fierce, unyielding, and sovereign.

The castle was designed to withstand the greatest of battles, with magical barriers woven into its very structure. The air was thick with the scent of burning incense, and beneath its walls, the Shadow Legion of Sung Ye-Jun prepared for war at his command. This castle, like its master, was a fusion of beauty and destruction.

2. Sung Ye-Rin: The Silver Dragon and Her Castle

Sung Ye-Rin, the second child of Sung Su-Ho, was a magnificent Silver Dragon, possessing elegance and grace in her transformations. Her essence was more refined, a dragon of purity and light, and her strength radiated from her serene and calm demeanor. Her role within the family was one of diplomacy and power, maintaining the balance between creation and destruction.

Castle Name: Lunaris Citadel

Description:
Lunaris Citadel was a stunning work of divine architecture, built beneath the mighty Umbra Citadel of Sung Jin-Woo. The castle gleamed with a silver luster, as if the walls themselves were made of moonlight. Elegant towers, adorned with crystalline structures that shimmered in the light, rose gracefully from the ground, their pointed peaks touching the very heavens above. The entire castle seemed to float, surrounded by wisps of ethereal mist and a soft glow that emanated from the sacred pools of moonstone within.

The interior of Lunaris Citadel was a peaceful, yet imposing, sight. Its walls were decorated with tapestries depicting the history of the Sung Dynasty, and its floors were inlaid with silvery marble that seemed to pulse with life. The grand hall was where Sung Ye-Rin would sit on her throne, bathed in the soft light of the moon, ready to provide counsel to her allies and ready to defend her realm against any threats.

At the heart of the castle was the Moonstone Forge, where Sung Ye-Rin crafted the finest weapons and tools from the purest celestial metal, materials that were used to forge the defenses of her realm and the armor of her soldiers. Like its mistress, Lunaris Citadel was a beacon of tranquility and unwavering strength.

As Sung Ye-Jun and Sung Ye-Rin oversaw the construction of their castles, they knew that these fortresses would not only serve as homes but as symbols of their power and devotion to the Divine Triad. These castles, Inferna Draconis and Lunaris Citadel, would stand as twin beacons beneath the grand castles of their parents, marking the rise of a new era for the Sung Dynasty and the realms they ruled.

Their rule, filled with strength and grace, would ensure that the legacy of the Divine Triad continued to shine brightly for all of eternity.
